

New Dietetics Programs

Our accreditation process ensures a high standard of dietetics education is maintained. If you're developing a new dietetics program, you first need to notify Dietitians Australia by emailing us at regulation@dietitiansaustralia.org.au

Process for a new program

All new programs will be required to be accredited with conditions 12 months prior to students commencing the program.

The process for new programs is outlined in our Processes for the Accreditation of Dietetics Education Programs.

Other accreditation documents

Accreditation Standards for Dietetics Education Programs

Details the minimum requirements that Universities need to demonstrate to gain accreditation for their dietetics education program.

Evidence Guide for the Accreditation of Dietetics Education Programs

Guides universities in submitting evidence they meet our accreditation standards.

Get in touch

If you have questions about accrediting your dietetics course, contact us at accreditationadmin@dietitiansaustralia.org.au

Accreditation of university programs

We accredit university programs to ensure a high standard of dietetics education in Australia. Learn how to accredit your university's dietetics programs.

Accreditation fees and charges

Our fees for the accreditation of a dietetic education program and to maintain the accreditation. See our fees.

University programs

A full list of dietetics programs accredited by Dietitians Australia. You usually need an accredited degree to become an Accredited Practising Dietitian (APD).